On the other hand, there has been some positive achievement; real income has risen in the past five years by some 60%.

Mr. Gass qualified this by pointing out that the increase is not a per ceptia one, as the population increased alightly more.

Touching on the question of labour productivity. Mr. Gass as labour productivity productivi Touching on the question of labour productivity. Mr. Gass expressed the opinion that this was fundamentally a question of skill in management and organization, samething which takes years and even decades to develop, rather than one of the efficiency of individual workers. For this reason we should not look upon the problem of increasing labour productivity as one which could be solved in a short period.

Stressing the importance of atabilizing the level of prices. Mr. Gass said that at present there is no rational incentive for people to save. It is vital that such an incentive be offered by achieving stability.

It is perfectly legitimate for Israel to keep before itself the nim that, in time, its people abould live as well as the most advanced industrial country. It is not legitimate for us to live

Do those who advance the argument hold that Knesset Members should only be expected to lose their immunity when charged with grave offences but that they can disregard formal regulations and laws of the country at their will? This theory, if accepted, would certainly place Knesset Members in a position of civically immoral privilege. Perhaps the whole question of Knesset immunity should be thoroughly re-examined. The total immunity which now exists seems altogether too far-reaching. If a member is protected against any actions for stander or libel as a result of statements made in the course of his duties, this should be more than sufficient to guarantee his freedom to meet the demands of his high office. Beyond that he should be as much under the immediate and automatic rule of law as any common eitisen of the land.

"I think they're Jacobson and Machanik . . two Jewa." I whispered to my chaver, "Im't it ironical to think it's they who are stopping the Israelis?

"Let's hope there'll be something of a game now," grumbled the voice behind, after half-time. "Slow motion, that's all it was after Transvaal had kicked a goal."

"Magnificent!" shouted the man. "Both sides are on their toes!"

Suddenly a free-kick near goal was given against the Israels. In the stand diagonally opposite, Indiana. Coloureds and Africans booed lustily.

The game got faster and faster and I more confused. All at once I saw the Africans, Indiana and Coloureds rise to their feet in a mass, waving and yelling. Israel had scored a goal!

The world became a lovely place to live in.

"Not bad," the voice behind grudged us that beautiful moment. "Can't think why our boys slipped up..."

As if their goal had i..., ired them, the Israelis carried the ball over and over again to the Transvaal side. But a stone wall opposed them.

"They lack that last ounce of strength and purpose," said my husband, "Shoot, you idious!" he yelled. "They don't seem to be able to get past Transvaal at the goal. Fow Transval's got the ball. Israel's in for it... they're in a dangerous position... no!.. they've stopped it. Go ca, Transval!"

"Which side are you on?" I asked acidly.

"Well. Pm interested in the game for itself."

A little reception was held on the field, the notabilities of the sports world exchanging greetings with the players. "Our boys look very young," said my chaver on the left. "Some of them are. One told me he was 17 — he looked just a baby — and another was 18. But the others are older," "I expect they haven't eaten enough steaks to make them strong enough to play Bouth Africans," remarked my chaver gloomily, "You don't need steaks to be strong," I assured him, thinking of the Japaness, who fought on a handful of rice. I looked at him attentively. It hadn't occurred to me that he was a Jew, and I don't believe it had occurred to him either, before this match.

"Nonsense!" came a sharp voice from behind. "How can you compare a Scottish professional team with a lot of amatour Israelis?"

"Twe read all aboutem., you wait and see." The man, however, sounded less confident.

WE had been feeling the heat in Jerusalem somewhat and thinking that a week's sheard seemed to stimulate neither our own faculties nor those of the faithful band of regular contributors to this column.
